

I came, I saw...

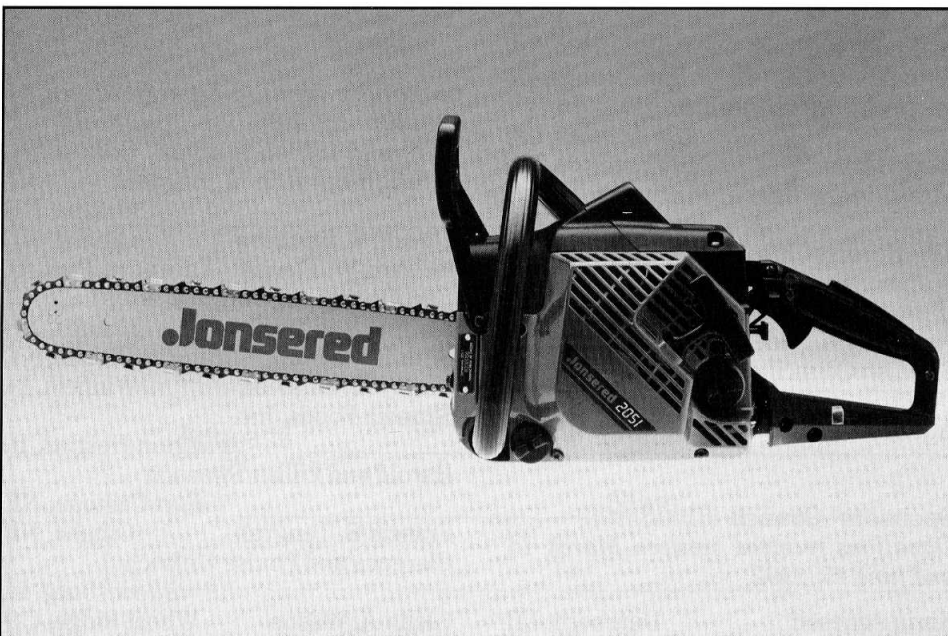

Anyone who has driven through the length of Sweden has seen a lot of trees. As one of the most heavily forested countries in the world, Sweden is the logical place for developments in the logging industry such as the creation of a lightweight, one-man chain saw, a breakthrough machine introduced by the Swedish company Jonsered in 1954. Since then, many of the safety and design innovations that have made the logger's chain saw a necessity in nearly every suburban homeowner's tool shed have come from the R&D department at Jonsered, headquartered in Partille just outside of Gothenburg.

The company's latest and proudest achievement is called the Jonsered 2051 Turbo, the world's first turbo saw. The company listened to what professional loggers wanted in a 50cc saw: fast acceleration, good power, high chain speed and maneuverability, and, of course, maximum safety and lightweight ergonomic design.

The turbo design removes 99% of the dust and dirt before the air reaches the filter, eliminating one of the banes of chain saw operation. This feature, combined with excellence of design and a chain brake that engages in less than 5/100ths of a second, makes the Jonsered 2051 Turbo a fitting recipient of Popular Science magazine's "The Best of What's New" Award. After 35 years of continual developments in chain saw design, the award is evidence that Jonsered just keeps making them better and better.

In the United States Jonsered chain saws are imported and distributed by Tilton Equipment Company, P.O. Box 68, Rye, New Hampshire 03870.
